About 11 children are kidnapped in India every hour of the day of which half of them are never found. Child trafficking is the third largest profitable industry of the world and India seems to be in the thick of it. India is not only the source, but a destination and transit point for this heinous crime.

We can crib about it or take action to protect our children from these heinous people.

Prevention they say is better than cure. Here is a suggestion for the tech savvy and not so tech savvy adults. Kids these days are extremely tech savvy, and they will grasp it in a jiffy. Kidnappers work on the sly and don't want to get noticed. In addition, they don't have time on their side. Hence, any attention seeking and time delaying response will deter the kidnappers from committing the heinous crime.

Share a password with your child. May be the name of your pet or his favourite action hero/cartoon character or the name of her favourite Barbie doll. The kid will only travel with the unknown person if the unknown person knows the magical password. If he/she tells the kid that the parent wasn't able to come to pick him/her, the kid's response should be very polite but audible for the others around and ask the kidnapper "What's the password?" This will deter the kidnapper who will vanish at the next opportunity.

This is a simple yet very powerful technic to ward off kidnapping.
